Also what rate of speed can be attained without interfering with the precision of fire with this weapon. When we have discussed in order every factor of the offence, then a consideration of the defensive qualities is in order. On what bearing does her armor, or protection of coal, or bulkhead arrangement best cover her vitals, this important steam-pipe or outboard connection, or that ammunition-supply? And so on through every question entering into the fighting of the ship. Out of this all, by drawing comparisons between advantages, and disadvantages comes a settlement upon three things: 1st. Some presentation of the ship, which shall be the strongest to offer to the enemy for offence and defence. 2d. Some rate of speed, which shall serve your weapons best. 3d. Some one range for your guns at which the greatest damage will be inflicted. Doing all this is making a tactical survey of your ship; and upon this bearing, with this speed, and at this distance you must endeavor to keep and fight your enemy. Further on we will see that what is true of one ship is true of ships in combination; and that, in solving the problem concerning the position to be occupied by ships in the line of battle, the question of rank of the several commanding officers hardly even enters. CHAPTER II. WAR-VESSELS. I. To be able to meet the enemy, we must oppose him with...
