Excellent e-book and useful one. It is written in straightforward phrases rather than confusing. I am just very happy to explain how here is the finest publication I have got read through in my very own lifestyle and might be the greatest book for possibly.

In the summer of 1903 I spent some time at the Minnesota Seaside Station at Port Renfrew on the West Coast of Vancouver Island at the entrance of the Strait of Juan de Fuca. There was no provision made for dredging, consequently all the specimens obtained were shore forms. In 1908 and again in 1909 I spent some time at the Dominion Biological Station at Departure Bay, five miles from the City of Nanaimo on the East Coast of the Island. Here I collected shore specimens and obtained others by dredging, seldom in water more than 25 fathoms deep. The best locality for dredging was in Northumberland Strait, between Gabriola Island and other smaller Islands, at the mouth of Dodd s Narrows, a narrow channel between two small islands, about ten miles southeast of the Station. Besides the specimens that I collected while there, several others were handed over to me by Rev. G. W. Taylor, the curator of the Station. These were obtained at various times from various points along the coast from Rose Spit on Graham Island in the Queen Charlotte Archipelago, southward as far as Victoria, and many of these were very fine specimens. In 1909 Prof. John Macoun, Curator of the Dominion Museum at Ottawa, with two assistants, Messrs. Spreadborough and Young, spent four months collecting off Amphitrite Point at the entrance to the Alberni Canal on the West Coast,...
