Not illustrated. 1877 Excerpt: .a communication may, in the same manner, be forwarded in the opposite direction; though it is stated that the Atlantic Telegraph company, in order to avoid Varley's patent, have not adopted the system devised by him, but operate the cable by the use of a single condenser C at Valentia, which answers for transmission in both directions. With a single condenser the signals are sent from Newfoundland in the following manner: When a key is depressed at T, the electric current, for example the H-E, flows directly into the cable K, and arriving at Valentia, flows almost entirely into the side of the condenser C, which is attached to the cable, the resistance of the cable being so great that comparatively little of it goes to the earth. The accumulation of + E in one side of the condenser causes a like quantity of + E to be driven out of the opposite side of the condenser, passing through the earth and G to the earth, giving a + signal upon the galvanometer. When the depressed key at Newfoundland is again released, putting the cable at that place to earth, then the + E stored up in the condenser flows back into the cable, producing a + current towards Newfoundland, which lasts for a certain time, partly because the discharge of the condenser is not instantaneous, and partly on account of the inductive action set up by the original current. At the same...
