Excerpt: . . . in his time against improper language spoken or written, 2 and the Romans took delight in satire: Pasquino and Marforio are old inhabitants of Rome. The inveterate habit of exaggerated speech created many culprits; needy rapacity and oratorical vanity, stimulated in the schools and prohibited in the Forum, made many accusers. A successful accusation brought profit and honor. The law, in the first place, granted to him who had avenged it a share in the property of the condemned man; 3 and frequently the Senate added a large reward, the Emperor bestowed honors, and the whole city its applause. The future opened prosperously to the fortunate prosecutor; all things were offered him, - fortune and dignities. Thus, as mens servility and as their desires increased, cases which rendered men guilty multiplied; the law punished not words only, but a gesture, an involuntary forgetfulness, an indiscreet curiosity:...
