Excerpt from The Museum of Remarkable and Interesting Events, Vol. 1 of 2: Containing Historical Adventures and Incidents of Travels and Voyages, Scenes of Peril and Escapes, Military Achievements, Eccentric Personages, Noble Examples of Fortitude and Patriotism; With Various Other Entertaining Narratives, Anecdotes, Etc Mankind are creatures of sentiment and feeling, as well as of intelligence. Knowledge is chiefly interesting as it contributes to the development of feeling. The gratification which it affords, is one of the most powerful incentives to the acquisition of it; and is often an ample compensation for the expense and toil of acquisition. This is particularly the case with that portion of human knowledge, which relates directly to the beautiful or sublime. Aside from the many other advantages which it affords, it is a source of immediate and abundant pleasure. It often fills us with inexpressible delight. Though it falls below the dignity and importance of the spiritual and religious, it rises far above the merely sensual. We contemplate the beautiful with a calm delight, but trace the sublime with impassioned and overpowering interest. When our...
