Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints Millennial Star, Vol. 71: July 22, 1909 This process continued during the subsequent growth of the Church, both while under Roman persecutions, and probably still more while under the demoralizing policy of the first Christian Emperor Constantine, and it had become intensified when that period of her history was reached known to the world as the dark ages (from the tenth to the sixteenth centuries), when spiritual life was apparently at its lowest ebb and the Papal power in its zenith. The result of this ever growing apostasy from many of the grandest truths of Christs religion, could only have been the spread of many serious errors, the introduction of new forms of worship, and the growth of Gnosticism and other heretical contro versies. By this time the Christian Church had in many respects become very unlike what it had been in the apostolic days. The old established form of baptism had been changed, and its object. So misunderstood that infant baptism became introduced and was held to be an absolute necessity, with the natural consequence that the eternal damnation of children dying unbaptized was accepted as a doctrine of the Church, and it is within the memory of very many persons that the bodies of unbaptized infants have been refused burial in consecrated grounds. The beautiful doctrine of baptism for the dead as spoken of by the Apostle Paul had already been entirely abolished for many years past by the Council of Carthage, while the need of the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit had come to be denied. There no longer existed inspired Apostles and Prophets who, according to Pauls epistle to the Ephesians (chap. 4:...
