Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Applications of Psychology to Education In October, 1921, under the direction of Professor J. V. Breitwieser, Department of Education, University of California, and at the request of the county board of education, a survey was made of all the school children of Modoc County in and above the fourth grade of the grammar schools and in the high schools. This survey is unique in that, so far as the writer has been able to discover, no report has been made through the medium of the various periodicals and publications in the field of education or psychology of any other attempt to apply standardized tests to entire counties of the isolated rural type. Modoc County is the most northeastern county in California, having an area of 3823 square miles with a population according to the census of 1920 of 1.4 persons per square mile, a decrease of 12.4 per cent in population below the census of 1910. The county is divided into three valleys separated by high ranges; the chief means of communication with the outside world is by way of a narrow gauge railroad running into the most eastern of the valleys, which maintains passenger service three times a week. The chief occupations of the inhabitants of this region are sheep raising, the cultivation of a few orchards, and the growing of a few short-season crops. The survey applies to children chiefly of American stock, as there are very few foreigners in the county, and the Indian children were not tested.
